BATTLE STAMPEDE AS REAL IN MAKING AS ON THE SCREEN

John Bowers Beat Off Three Thousand Rushing Steers Before Going Down Beneath Charge
What is the biggest thrill engendered by an action rush on the screen? Was it the surging hordes of revolutionaries in "Passion," the rescue-race of native canoes in "The Idol Dancer," or the thunder-gallop of the supply train in vain attempt to save General Custer in "Bob Hampton of Placer"? Or is it the mad stampede of 4000 steers, charging headdown on a defenceless man and a battling man in "The Sky Pilot"? Each has its own adherents, but there is one man at least who would welcome all the other thrills as something easy compared to the spinal shivers he experienced while facing that cattle stampede in the Cathrine Curtis Production of Ralph Connor's famous story of the Canadian ranches. This is John Bowers, popular movie star, who is particularly and peculiarly fitted to know whereof he speaks, in view of the fact that in the role of the "Sky Pilot" it is he who was chosen by Director King Vidor to stand over the body of an injured little ranch girl and face the onrush of terror-stricken cattle. Fists clinched, teeth gritted, Bowers stood his ground in that eventful moment when a thousand head of cattle stampeded towards him. Four times his clothes were ripped by steer horns before he even paid heed to his bruises. The fifth instance took the man out of his hands, however. A wild roar howled him over, with a result it would that required six stitches.

But the real thrill had not yet arrived. When Bowers was knocked down, King Vidor, who had "planted" his cameras in a trough eighteen feet deep dug just in back of the point of focus, climbed out of the pit and took upon himself the work of frightening the animals to either side of Colleen Moore, who, face to the ground, had not realized that Bowers was no longer over her and defending her from the mad onrush.

It is estimated that by the time Bowers was felled, almost 3000 head of cattle had passed by him. It was, therefore, only up to the director to fend the other thousand over the danger zone. But that was some job in itself. As the herd rushed onward speed increased and the animals came thundering on toward the figure of the waving director and the motionless figure of the girl, backed up by a battery of cameras, only the tops of which were sticking above the ground. It was really less than two minutes but, it seemed hours to King Vidor who stood doggedly to the task of waving the animals aside.

Thus it happens that the scenes of the cattle stampede in "The Sky Pilot" are said to rival any "thrill scenes" ever shown on the screen. There was no faking, no doubling, no tricks. Bowers stood to his task until he was knocked to the ground; and the several hundred feet of this cattle stampede, practically all of which is close-up photography, will make a striking impression when seen on the screen.

"I didn't realize at the time how thrilling the scene was," said Bowers, after he had witnessed the first scene of "The Sky Pilot." "But after I saw it on the screen, then the whole thing came back to me. I almost believe I know every animal in the picture by sight—and I know darn well I can pick out the five that got too well acquainted with me." The dramatic stampede scenes in "The Sky Pilot" form a climax for a gripping story of the Canadian plains adapted from Ralph Connor's book "The picture is released by the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and will be shown at the Idle Hour Theatre Saturday.
